A heartbreak, a pandemic, and the warm embrace of nature - 'The Hills Know Of You' comes from a journal entry of a friend dealing with separation amid a lonely spell in the peak of the pandemic.

The song is an ode to all the places we trust with our secrets - It talks of his yearning to scream out his internal angst into the vast abyss of the mountains, only to have them echo reality back to him.

Frizzell's third single has over 22,000 views on YouTube and about 45,000 streams on Spotify

Frizzell D'Souza straddles the worlds of architecture and music. She has been studying the former for the last four years and practising the latter since she was in third grade. She finds a similarity between the two. "It is the process," she says, "When we work on a design in architecture, we start with a concept. We do a lot of redos and keep going back and forth with it until we get it right. That is a parallel I find in music."
